Hello Mr. Davidson,

I know I am a little late in responding, but I've been meaning to put together my feedback for you, and here it is.

I truly enjoyed your presentation on Time Management. I particularly liked your social-historical explanation at the beginning of the speech to put into context our time pressure changes over time. Explaining how space is changing with population growth, creating a new set of problems, definitely hit home with me.

I realized that as my parents married, they longed to simplify their life by moving out of the busy city of Los Angeles, to the smaller city, Sacramento. While they achieved their objective of raising their kids in a smaller city, they had to deal with helping aging parents from a distance, and go with-out raising their kids close to family. These affects had their own problems as you can imagine.

As I'm now considering my next steps regarding relocation, Sacramento has become a large city, and I wonder if moving to a smaller city would be better.

Finding the balance between large vs. small cities in regards to lifestyle, accessibility to family and entertainment sure are challenging.

Thank you for helping me put these factors into perspective, and finding ways to cut-out all the clutter.

Thank you,

Bethany Loya
